

Basics of the supervision of final theses

Date: December 2019

1. In general, the chair for Economic Policy and Constitutional Economics (Prof. Feld) supervises theses on the following topics:
 - Economic Policy
 - Fiscal Policy
 - New Political Economy
 - History of Economic Thought in connection with the Freiburg School
2. There are no application deadlines. You can start at any time.
3. Theses can be written in English or in German.
4. Depending on the topic of your thesis, it can be advantageous if you have attended a lecture/ seminar of our chair. However, this is not a strict requirement.
5. Bachelor theses are generally written as literature reviews. This means that the existing scientific literature is structured and discussed with regard to a concrete research question.
6. Master theses can be written as literature reviews. However, we encourage you to develop a master thesis that applies a theoretical concept to a case study or data.
7. The chair does not assign research questions, because finding a topic is also part of the process. You are welcome to come to the consultation with ideas (a finished outline is not necessary!).
8. Students often prefer to write about current topics, such as the trade conflict between the US and China. However, there is little scientific literature on current issues that can be evaluated. Therefore, thoroughly check whether there is enough scientific literature or focus on a more general question.
